the analysis of the malvertising network, provided with the samples taken by the researchers, allowed them to find out that the big majority of these infections were occurring in eastern europe. the hackers were using the ip address 149.15.70.149 to infect the users with the malware. sadly, this malware is still spreading in the wild and it is not possible to remove it with the usual antivirus tools, which proves to be effective only after a longer period of time. consequently, the infected users have to remove the virus manually. when receiving a torrent, you must make sure that it is legitimate and that the people behind it did not trick you. the major aspect is that the user does not need to install anything, apart from a legitimate bittorrent client. in order to execute the malicious payload, the malware program makes use of a legitimate executable that is part of the software development kit (sdk) of the operating system, in this case a windows 7-based one. unfortunately, for this reason, the actual size of the malicious program is very small. the main purpose of this malware is to re-implement all the functionalities of the legitimate application. it also adds a number of keyloggers and some other components. once installed, it runs in the background and will start obtaining data from the users and send it to remote servers. upon analysis of the malicious samples taken by the researchers, it was found that the malware was based on a legitimate software called pocket decoder. it was used for adding video codecs to the system and has an identical behavior in terms of appearance. this is the reason why the analysts believe that this is one of the implementation of this original code. 5ec8ef588b
