keywords: crack-cocaine, health outcome-related keywords, crack, cocaine, adverse health outcome, adverse event, community health, epidemiology, drugs, risk assessment, drug use, addiction, health promotion, prevention, health care. recommendations: the cdc should develop and implement a series of national policies to reduce the harms associated with crack-cocaine use. to address the harms associated with crack-cocaine use, the cdc should: (1) develop and implement a national policy on crack cocaine to reduce the harms associated with crack-cocaine use; (2) increase funding for research to comprehensively address the harms associated with crack cocaine use; and (3) conduct evaluations of the effectiveness of policies on crack cocaine use to improve the implementation of effective interventions.

limitations: this review was limited to peer-reviewed research and systematic reviews, and only english-language articles and reviews. there was limited literature on the harms of crack-cocaine use, and the findings were mixed.

discussion: crack-cocaine use is associated with blood-borne and sexually transmitted infections, neonatal health, and violence, but the literature on the harms of crack-cocaine use is limited. there is a need for more research to comprehensively address the harms associated with crack cocaine use. in particular, more research is needed to examine the health and social harms of crack-cocaine use among us-born blacks.
