In Korea, the population of patients with ischemic stroke is significantly increasing and ischemic stroke is the third most common cause of death in Korean patients. Over the last decade, treatment options for acute ischemic stroke patients have rapidly expanded; however, the standards of care for this population have not been well-defined \[@B2]\]. Early initiation of acute intravenous thrombolysis using recombinant tissue plasminogen activator (rtPA) is widely accepted in stroke management and has been established as an independent predictor of a favorable outcome \[@B3]\]. However, the incidence of symptomatic intracranial hemorrhage (sICH) following intravenous rtPA remains unclear. In addition, the precise neurological outcomes of acute ischemic stroke patients who received intravenous rtPA in Korea remain elusive. Therefore, we conducted this study to determine the in-hospital mortality, sICH, and the functional outcome of acute ischemic stroke patients who were treated with intravenous rtPA and received thrombectomy at our institution.
