Nearly 30 percent of adults ages 18 through 64 with employer-sponsored insurance were privately insured last year, a ratio that stood at a little more than 20 percent in 2015. Meanwhile, about 20 percent of Medicare beneficiaries were “patients like me” last year, a percentage that was slightly higher in 2015. The latest data signal that while the bulk of Medicare beneficiaries under 65 years old have in recent years felt the effects of the Affordable Care Act’s insurance marketplaces in the form of diminishing benefits and rising costs, the marketplaces have made a noticeable impact on people ages 18 through 64 as well. “There’s a lot more variability in health insurance coverage than there used to be,” said Larry Levitt, senior vice president at the Kaiser Family Foundation. “The Affordable Care Act has changed the market more than anything else, and it’s showing up in people
